

Abstract

The invention discloses an architecture for the input / output buffer section of an FPGA. It provides a convenient and efficient addressing scheme for addressing fuse matrices that are used to configure programmable input / output buffers in the FPGA. The programmable I/O buffers may be configured to implement a large number of different output and input bus standards

1004464.1